Braintree halts crackdown on Uber, Lyft ridesharing

Tabled. The licensing board will wait to make new ridesharing regulations.

City officials in Braintree balked Tuesday at pursuing new regulations for ridesharing services like Uber and Lyft.

The licensing board in the city decided to wait and see what state legislators decide to do when they vote on a new package of regulations in the fall, rather than try to make new citywide rules on its own. The vote to table discussion on the idea, which got its start three months ago, was unanimous.

Braintree would have become the first in the state to crack down on ride-hailing apps by requiring that drivers get permits and meet certain minimums for insurance coverage and background checks.

The bold move attracted attention to the Town Hall meeting from media, Uber top brass and at least one taxi business owner.

The board could have voted Tuesday to pursue new rules — a two- to three-month bureaucratic process, according to James Casey, town clerk and board chairman. A vote to move the rule-making process forward would have also allowed demonstrators a chance to speak at a podium.

Quoted

"I think the decision ... is absolutely the right one for both riders and drivers in the Town of Braintree."

Meghan Joyce

Uber East Coast General Manager Meghan Joyce, who is based in Boston and is from Braintree, said she was happy with the outcome of the meeting.

"I think the decision ... is absolutely the right one for both riders and drivers in the Town of Braintree," Joyce told Metro. "They will continue to have both plentiful transportation options and also job opportunities that ridesharing provides."

State lawmakers were scheduled to take up a bill that would regulate ridesharing statewide in September.

In May, board members voted 4-1 to send a cease-and-desist order to ridesharing companies operating in the city. The ban was later put on hold.

The board bowed to political pressure, said Jenifer Pinkham, a lawyer representing Braintree Best Taxi. At Tuesday's meeting, Casey said approximately 100 opponents of a ban on ridesharing reached out to the board.

"Things have changed and now they're changing their votes," Pinkham told Metro. "They're caving in, unfortunately."

More than a dozen Uber drivers from the Braintree area demonstrated outside the city's Town Hall before the meeting. The drivers told Metro they came out because they either heard reports in the media or received texts from other Uber employees about the rally.

An Uber representative told Metro one or two riders who were not Uber employees had also been there to demonstrate.

Uber drivers — some of whom said they worked part-time, others full-time — told Metro they thought it was wrong to make rules about ridesharing on a town-by-town basis. They said regulations should be made at the state level, or not at all.

"It's a backward move. I don't want to be the only town in the state [to crack down on ridesharing]," said Tom Kent, a 30-year-old nursing student who said he drives for Uber 16 hours per week and didn't want to see regulations change. "I think it's fine the way it is."

Assault. Chelsea officer charged with punching handcuffed man

A Chelsea police officer has been charged with punching a handcuffed man then lying about it in a police report.

Felix Rivera, 34, of Lynn, has been suspended without pay and is expected to be arraigned on charges of beating a suspect in his custody and lying about the circumstances of his arrest, according to Suffolk County District Attorney Dan Conley.

Rivera is charged with assault and battery, filing false reports and violating the victim's civil rights, Conley said.

Prosecutors said Rivera repeatedly punched a handcuffed man in the rear of a house on Chestnut Street on Sept. 26, 2014.

"There is no room in law enforcement for anyone who would beat a handcuffed prisoner or lie in a report," Conley said in a press release. "The evidence suggests this officer engaged in criminal conduct, not police work."

Rivera's report claimed that the 20-year-old Chelsea man, who was not named, was arrested on assault and battery on an officer, disorderly conduct and resisting arrest.

But the victim's attorney presented prosecutors with a video of the incident, which was filmed by a witness.

Chelsea Police Chief Brian Kyes called the incident "extremely troubling and concerning."

"A police officer's credibility and integrity are two of the most important attributes in this challenging profession," Kyes said in a statement. "Both operate at the core of our ability to build trust and confidence in our community members so as to effectively police our neighborhoods alongside our residents."

Chelsea cops responded to 155 Chestnut Street that night for a report of a man with a gun. The victim was at the scene, and appeared drunk, according to police. He was arrested for allegedly interfering with the investigation, Conley said.

But as the handcuffed man was being escorted away, Rivera allegedly struck him four times in the face, knocking him to the ground. Another officer reached out to stop him, Conley said. That officer, who prosecutors did not name, denied the allegation in Rivera's report that the victim had pushed him while being led from the scene. NATE HOMAN

West Nile virus risk level increases to 'moderate'

Pools of mosquitoes located in West Roxbury, Hyde Park, and Roslindale tested positive for West Nile virus last week.

Officials raised the risk level for the virus from low to moderate for Boston and the surrounding communities.

So far, there have been no human cases of the virus this year.

Residents can protect themselves by limiting their activities between dusk and dawn, avoiding swampy areas and wearing long-sleeve shirts, pants and socks.

According to health officials, DEET is the best repellent for adults while the CDC recommends certain items for children such as repellents that contain oil of lemon eucalyptus.

They are expected to be arraigned in Dorchester District Court on Tuesday.

Aaron Hernandez's fiancée takes his name

Two-timer. Hernandez also had sexual ties to a woman who tried to discredit a juror.

A judge gave the green light for Shayanna Jenkins, the fiancée of convicted murderer and former New England Patriot star tight end Aaron Hernandez permission to change her last name to Hernandez.

According to NECN, the Rhode Island probate judge granted the request to allow her to go by Jenkins-Hernandez so that she might have the same last name as their 2-year-old daughter Avielle.

Hernandez was found guilty of killing Odin Lloyd and is said to have shot a former associate who was present for the 2012 murders of Daniel de Abreu and Safiro Furtado in the South End.

Massachusetts prosecutors said on Monday that an anonymous caller, who told lawyers for Hernandez that one of the jurors who found him guilty of murder should have been disqualified, had a sexual relationship with the athlete.

Following his murder conviction, Hernandez's lawyers told the court they had been called by a person who gave her name only as "Katy," who they said claimed to have known one of the jurors who found Hernandez guilty and to have also known that the juror was aware that Hernandez was also charged with a 2012 double homicide.

Proof that a juror in the case had lied about his or her knowledge of Hernandez or had discussed the case outside of court could be grounds for the conviction to be overturned. Defense lawyers had asked the judge in the case to call the anonymous witness into court to be questioned under oath.

Prosecutors said in a court filing on Monday they had learned that the person, whose name they said is not "Katy" but which they did not disclose, had "an ongoing sexually explicit relationship with the defendant prior to and during the trial."

Hernandez' lawyers could not be reached for immediate comment.

Prime Minister of Israel Benjamin Netanyahu / GETTY IMAGES

Netanyahu asks US Jews to oppose Iran nuclear deal

Survey. American Jewish opinion are mixed on a dispute that has strained the U.S.-Israeli alliance.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu tried to rally U.S. Jews on Tuesday against the Iranian nuclear deal championed by President Barack Obama and facing review by Congress, saying it risked a catastrophic Middle East war.

In a webcast organized by Jewish groups in North America, Netanyahu reiterated Israel's arguments that the July 14 deal was not enough to curb Iranian nuclear projects with bomb-making potential while bringing Tehran a windfall in sanctions relief that could help fund destabilizing regional conflicts.

Netanyahu cast his opposition to the Iran deal as nonpartisan. He also pushed back against the Obama administration's counterargument that the deal was the only way to avoid eventual war with Iran.

Organizers said 10,000 people — not taking into account expected group audiences — had signed up to view the webcast.

That might translate into grassroots pressure on U.S. lawmakers weighing ratification of the deal by Sept. 17.

Should Congress vote against the deal, the United States might lose out while the five other big-power signatories reengage with Iran, including in lucrative trade deals.

Netanyahu sought to play down this concern, saying international firms would think twice about entering Iranian markets if it meant losing bigger U.S. business opportunities.

Quoted

"I don't oppose this deal because I want war. I oppose this deal because I want to prevent war. And this deal will bring war. ... This is a time to stand up and be counted. Oppose this dangerous deal."

Netanyahu

Having infuriated the Obama administration by speaking against Iran in Congress in March at the invitation of the Democratic president's Republican rivals, Netanyahu cast himself as the emissary of an Israeli public that, polls show, mostly shares his misgivings about the deal with Iran.

Five things you need to know

1 With final defendant, Madoff criminal case comes to an end

In 1964, Irwin Lipkin became one of the first employees at a small New York trading firm called Bernard L. Madoff Investment Securities.

Five decades later, Lipkin, 77, is set to be sentenced on Wednesday in Manhattan federal court for falsifying records, marking the end of the criminal case stemming from the collapse of Madoff's multibillion-dollar Ponzi scheme more than six years ago.

Lipkin is the last of 15 people who either pleaded guilty or were convicted at trial in connection with the fraud, which cost investors approximately $17 billion in principal.

Prosecutors have conceded that Madoff alone knew the full extent of his deception. Even his deputy, Frank DiPascali, who was intimately involved in the fraud, testified he believed Madoff had hidden assets to cover customers' liabilities almost until the end.

Lipkin, who pleaded guilty to falsifying records as the firm's controller, has asked for probation, citing his declining health, while prosecutors have requested prison time.

2 Suit: Kentucky school officer shackled disabled kids

The American Civil Liberties Union filed a federal lawsuit accusing a school resource officer in Kentucky of handcuffing two disabled children to punish them for behavior related to their disabilities, ACLU officials said on Tuesday.

The lawsuit was filed in the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky. It accuses Kenton County Sheriff's Office deputy Kevin Sumner, a Covington Independent Public Schools resource officer, of violating the children's constitutional rights and the Americans with Disabilities Act during three incidents in 2014.

3 Major US airlines end trophy hunter shipments after Cecil outcry

Three U.S. airlines have banned the transport of lion, leopard, elephant, rhino or buffalo killed by trophy hunters, in the latest fallout from the killing of Zimbabwe's Cecil the lion last month.

American Airlines said on Tuesday it would join Delta Airlines and United Airlines in banning the transport of animals known in Africa as the "big five," coined by hunters because they are the hardest to kill on foot.

4 Eco-friendly 3-D printed supercar

A California automotive startup is hoping their prototype supercar will redefine car manufacturing. The car dubbed "Blade" didn't come off an assembly line, but out of a 3-D printer.

"The 3-D printed chassis is only 102 pounds and has the same strength and safety protection as a frame made out of steel," said Brad Balzer, the lead designer on the project.

By using carbon fiber instead of steel or aluminum for the body, the entire vehicle only weighs 1,400 pounds, giving it twice the weight-to-horsepower ratio of a Bugatti Veyron.

The Blade is fitted with a 700-horsepower engine that runs on natural gas.

5 Key senator announces support for Iran nuclear deal

Democratic Sen. Tim Kaine, a co-author of the bill allowing Congress to review the nuclear deal with Iran, said on Tuesday he would support the nuclear agreement.

The agreement announced on July 14 between world powers and Tehran "is a dramatic improvement over the status quo in improving global security," Kaine said in a Senate speech announcing he would back it.

Under the review bill, Congress has until Sept. 17 to accept or reject the nuclear pact.

Man sues wife for fraud after seeing her with no makeup

An Algerian man has reportedly sued his wife after waking up on the day after their marriage to find her barefaced with no makeup.

Emirates 247 reported that the groom took his bride to court the day after their marriage, where he accused her of not looking as pretty as she did before the wedding.

The groom, who was not identified, was seeking $20,000 in damages for "psychological suffering," according to the report.

Algerian reports claimed when he first laid eyes on his au naturel wife, he didn't recognize her and even mistook her for a "thief who came to steal his apartment."

"He said he was deceived by her as she used to fill up her face with makeup before their marriage," Emirates 247 reported, quoting a court source.

"He said she looked very beautiful and attractive before marriage, but when he woke up in the morning and found that she had washed the makeup off her face, he was frightened as he thought she was a thief."

There was no word on whether an annulment was looming, but if it is, we suggest the bride treat herself to a celebratory Sephora splurge. METRO

Stewart steps away from comedy gold as election heats up

President Barack Obama speaks with Jon Stewart. / GETTY IMAGES

Worn out. Jon Stewart told the Guardian newspaper in April that he was weary after covering four previous elections.

Heartbroken fans are wishing Jon Stewart a "jonvoyage" on Twitter, but Donald Trump and the other 2016 presidential candidates are breathing a sigh of relief.

Stewart steps down from "The Daily Show" on Thursday after 16 years of biting political and media satire just as the presidential election campaign — a comedy gold mine — heats up.

Trump, the billionaire businessman turned Republican Party White House contender, has become Stewart's favorite target as his tenure on the popular Comedy Central program winds down.

Stewart, who is widely credited with having transformed U.S. political comedy, has dubbed next year's elections "Democalypse 2016."

The 52-year-old comedian has mocked Trump's hair and gleefully ridiculed his comments on everything from immigrants to breastfeeding. REUTERS

Kasich, Christie make the cut for GOP debate

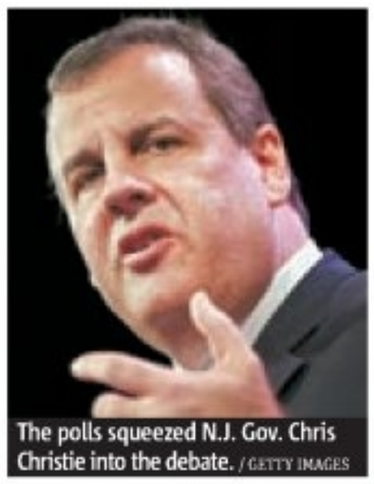
Republican Govs. Chris Christie and John Kasich on Tuesday won the last spots on stage next to front-runner Donald Trump and seven other candidates in the first prime-time presidential debate, Thursday at 9 p.m. hosted by Fox News.

The debate invited the top 10 candidates in an average of five recent opinion polls.

The leftover candidates will appear in a separate forum outside of the spotlight at 5 p.m. EDT on Thursday, leaving them fighting to win attention and prove to voters and donors they have a legitimate shot at the nomination.

Making the cut were Trump, the real estate mogul who has shot to the top of Republican polls, former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker, former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee, retired neurosurgeon Ben Carson, U.S. Sens. Marco Rubio of Florida, Ted Cruz of Texas and Rand Paul of Kentucky, and Govs. Christie of New Jersey and Kasich of Ohio.



The polls squeezed N.J. Gov. Chris Christie into the debate. / GETTY IMAGES

Limit

Fox's decision to limit the participants to 10 was criticized by some Republicans as unfair given that several candidates were bunched in the low single digits, well within the margin of error of most polls.

Shuffled out of prime time were Perry, Santorum, U.S. Senator Lindsey Graham of South Carolina, Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal, former business executive Carly Fiorina, former New York Gov. George Pataki and former Virginia Gov. Jim Gilmore.

The limit also created weeks of anxiety for those on the bubble in the 17-candidate field. Without the attention gained in a nationally televised debate, some of those at the bottom of the pile could face an early end to their campaign.

Fox, which had said it would use the five most recent national polls recognized by the network to pick the participants, said it used polls conducted by Bloomberg, CBS, Fox, Monmouth University and Quinnipiac University.

Who's next in the 2015 Celebrity Summer Divorce-athon?

It's been a pretty brutal summer, as far as long-term matrimony goes. Ben Affleck and Jennifer Garner, Blake Shelton and Miranda Lambert, Miss Piggy and Kermit the Frog, even! And there's of course been that ever-present talk of Will Smith and Jada Pinkett Smith splitting, plus some scuttlebutt about Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie being on their last legs. And now? Gwen Stefani and Gavin Rossdale are done after 13 years of marriage. What the hell? (Oh, and if pop rock isn't your scene, Reba McEntire also announced she's getting a divorce, y'all.)

Given the shock some of these announcements have caused, I'm trying to be prepared for the next big shocker, putting the following marriages on notice. Granted, this is all completely baseless speculation, as I've heard nothing about any trouble in these particular unions, but the Stefani/Rossdale split came from out of nowhere, so who's to say? Here's who I'm most worried about:

• John Krasinski and Emily Blunt: They seem ridiculously happy and supernice, but if this summer has taught me anything, it's that terrible things happen to good people.

• Tom Hanks and Rita Wilson: Maybe the stress of having Chet Haze for a son will finally be too much.

• David Bowie and Iman: They've been pretty quiet lately. Let's speculate!

• Christina Aguilera and Matt Rutler: Sure, they're actually only still engaged, but two other "The Voice" judges have gone down, so Rutler should probably be worried.

Check out Alexander Skarsgard in drag

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

How do you get attention for the tiny little indie film you've got coming out? Well, if you're "True Blood" star Alexander Skarsgard, you hit the red carpet for the movie's premiere in full, glorious, 1970s drag. And that's just what he did for the debut of "The Diary of a Teenage Girl," towering over his costars in gold lame and an epic Farrah Fawcett wig. It looks like the whole cast and crew decided to play period dress-up for the event, but no one took it quite as far or as fabulous as Skarsgard. It's a good look for him. Now let's see if he can sissy that walk.

Real Housewife gets real arrested

I try to avoid covering the noncelebrities of the "Real Housewives" franchise — except when they end up getting arrested, which is actually pretty often. And what do you know? Here's a new one: Kim Richards, of the Beverly Hills "Real Housewives," has allegedly been arrested for shoplifting at — wait for it — a Target in Van Nuys, California. (Trust me, East Coasters, Van Nuys is not Beverly Hills.) I mean, seriously, a Target? Maybe it's all just a publicity stunt for the show, who knows, but who wants to guess what she was trying to make off with? I'm going with either a novelty guacamole bowl shaped like a giant hollowed-out avocado or some slick Mossimo sunglasses.

There's a new 'New Girl' in town

Zooey Deschanel is a mom. The "New Girl" star and Hello Giggles founder gave birth to a baby girl earlier this week in Los Angeles, according to Entertainment Tonight. "I am thrilled to confirm that Zooey Deschanel and her husband, Jacob Pechenik, are new parents to a beautiful healthy baby girl," her rep says. That birth announcement also sneakily serves as confirmation that the formerly engaged couple have tied the knot, as Deschanel and Pechenik were married recently in a super top-secret ceremony. They began dating in August 2014, two years after Deschanel's divorce from Death Cab for Cutie singer Benjamin Gibbard.

Kevin Bacon demands more male nudity

Kevin Bacon has come out with an important video PSA about a serious topic plaguing Hollywood: not enough full-frontal male nudity. "In so many films and TV shows, we see gratuitous female nudity," he says. "It's not fair to actresses, and it's not fair to actors because we want to be naked too." He's a huge proponent of more on-screen dongs — especially his own, whether it be on "Game of Thrones," in an upcoming Marvel film or something more overtly sexual. "Let me play Christian Grey. We'll do the whole movie in one long close-up of my penis," he offers. I've heard worse ideas. Like the actual "Fifty Shades of Grey" movie. Hey-oh!

Premiere. A new Hulu series follows Julie Klausner and Billy Eichner as they misbehave all over New York City.

Sometimes it's best to be 'Difficult'

Watch "Difficult People" on Hulu today. / ALI GOLDSTEIN

If "Difficult People" is anything like the other shows Amy Poehler has produced, (maybe you've heard of those little programs "Parks and Recreation" and "Broad City"), it's worth skipping a night out for.

Created by comedian Julie Klausner, the show follows the lives of the fictional Julie and pal Billy (Billy Eichner), two sarcastic and slightly bitter 30-somethings with a love for comedy. Their humor — and, by their own judgment, immense talents — were never fully recognized, for which they blame all of New York City.

KLAUSNER AND EICHNER GETTY IMAGES

Julie works as a TV recap writer, while Billy waits tables at a diner owned by their friends Denise (Gabourey Sidibe) and Nate (Derrick Baskin).

"What excites me now, and what I think made this current climate comfortable for this project, is that people really want authenticity," says Klausner. "There's a certain auteurship about that that's exciting."

Billy Eichner agrees, explaining that viewers want to relate to who they watch. "In early reactions to the show, people felt like they were living vicariously through these characters," he says. "These are very blunt, honest characters who say how they feel. Sometimes they're mean and sometimes they're outrageous and in your face."

For the series' other stars, it was the chance to work with Klausner and Eichner, on top of a stellar story line, that drew them to "Difficult People."

Cole Escola plays Matthew, a younger co-worker of Billy's who has everything Billy doesn't, from clothes to career opportunities. Escola actually met Klausner as a fan years earlier, after a performance. "Everyone involved is like a hero of mine," he says. "I've been listening to [Julie's] podcast for a long time."

Viewers can also expect a rotating door of guest stars throughout the show's eight episodes, from Martin Short to Amy Sedaris to … Debbie Harry?

"I was excited about all the guest stars, but it wasn't until Debbie Harry came to set that I was completely glued to the floor and speechless," Klausner gushes.

On TV. Tyra Banks and Kermit open up at TCA

Tyra Banks and Chrissy Teigen talk "FABlife." / GETTY IMAGES

"Honestly, having a show that you are the only person [hosting] is very, very difficult."

So said Tyra Banks, at the ABC panel for her new syndicated daytime talk show "FABlife" at the Television Critics Association press tour in Los Angeles on Tuesday.

Banks was referring to her years on "The Tyra Banks Show" and "America's Next Top Model," describing that time as "her most successful" but also "most unhappy."

But she doesn't have to worry about that with "FABlife." The former model will be sharing hosting duties with tastemakers such as Chrissy Teigen.

Teigen is officially listed as the food expert, but she also promised she'd be sharing some social media tips. "I know all the little secrets," Teigen said, when asked if she'd be giving any advice on how people can up their Instagram game.

Next up, Kermit and Miss Piggy appeared as part of a panel promoting the new "Muppets" show.

The show is about the (tragically) fictional late night show, "Up Late with Miss Piggy." Getting straight to the heart of the matter, Kermit confessed, "It can be tough to work with your ex." Drama. LISA WEIDENFELD

Interviewing Jesse Eisenberg about interviewing

Q&A. We talk to "The End of the Tour" star about playing both sides of the journalistic fence.

In "The End of the Tour," Jesse Eisenberg plays David Lipsky, an author and journalist who turned his experience spending a few days writing a story on David Foster Wallace into the book "Although Of Course You End Up Becoming Yourself." The film hits area theaters on Friday. / A24

Jesse Eisenberg tends to play characters who are shy ("Roger Dodger," "Adventureland") or menacingly passive-aggressive ("The Squid and the Whale," "The Social Network"). In real life, he's definitely the former. During our interview, the actor curls up on the couch, his head resting on the arm, quietly but assuredly discussing his role in "The End of the Tour." The film finds him playing the other side of the journalistic fence; based on David Lipsky's "Although Of Course You End Up Becoming Yourself," it re-creates the few days the author-journalist spent with the late David Foster Wallace after the release of "Infinite Jest." Eisenberg plays Lipsky to Jason Segel's Wallace, as both confidant and aggressor — a standard relationship during interviews.

You didn't rehearse for this. Did that make it feel fresh, like you were saying the lines for the first time?
That's how I did it. I really like doing that. With this movie, I didn't like saying the lines until we were filming, because my character's not as verbose as the other character. I didn't feel the need to rehearse my dialogue. It was more emotionally potent to not do anything until the camera was rolling. You don't have that luxury in movies, really, because you have to rehearse in order to set technical things up. But with this, we did have that. It was just the nature of the shoot being quiet — and a director who was pretty comfortable allowing us to be more flexible.

One of the main ideas in the film is meeting someone one admires and finding them to be pretty normal.
Normal, or maybe even more specifically not happy with the achievements you think you'd be happy with. You think, "If I could just achieve the success he has, I would be happy." And I see he's still unfulfilled. Not only is he unfulfilled, but he seems almost terrified. I think, "Oh goodness — in terms of my own trajectory or ascendance, it seems hopeless."

You're playing a journalist. Had you ever interviewed someone?
Mm-mm, no.

It's an unnatural form of communication because the interviewer needs to have an angle. And your character has one. He's trying to get Wallace to open up about something personal.
It creates a lot of dramatic tension, but it's also an understandable and sympathetic position to be in. My character is also struggling, also has a job to do. And Wallace agreed to the interview. When he becomes resistant, my characters tells him, "You agreed to the interview, so you haven't earned the right to become suddenly resistant on your own terms. You knew what the deal is." You can see it from both perspectives. Certainly as an actor being interviewed for things like this, I can see it from both perspectives as well. You try to be forthcoming, so the person writing the story can reasonably and comfortably write something. But you obviously have an allegiance to some kind of self-protection.

EISENBERG
GETTY IMAGES

Wallace has a line where he says he wishes he could shape the impression your character has of him. Do you feel anxiety in how other people will present you?
Yes, of course. It's unnerving. The best thing to do is not try to micromanage something that's unmanageable, which is how you are perceived by strangers. If you do interviews by virtue of it being part of the job, to promote the movie that they paid you to do, then you try to do as much as you can to protect yourself while still talking enough about the movie and yourself to warrant the interview.

One more thing

Bookworm

I don't want to assume you were a big Wallace fan already, but what was your experience with him?
I read him in college initially, in a nonfiction class. We were reading some of his essays, like from "A Supposedly Fun Thing I'll Never Do Again." Once I was in this movie, I started reading a lot more, obviously. I particularly love his nonfiction, where he writes about aspects of culture and interpersonal dynamics in ways that come at it from unusual angles.

How long did it take you to read "Infinite Jest"?
I started it for this, and it became an impossibility. I needed to set aside a long time, which I didn't have with this movie. So I'm doing it retroactively.

Why shopping on Etsy is easier than ever

The online marketplace just got a makeover with new features.

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
emily.laurence@metro.us

If you've logged on to Etsy this week, you might have noticed the shopping site looks a little different. And in this case, change is definitely a good thing. We chatted with Jaime DeLanghe, Etsy's senior product manager for search, to get the lowdown on all the new features.

Searches are filtered into easy-to-sort categories. "The thing we know about people who use Etsy is that they love to search," DeLanghe says. "A lot of the time, they aren't even looking for something specific; they want to search for something [broad] like jewelry."

Before, browsing on Etsy would bring up millions of items making it very overwhelming. Now, when you search for something, it is filtered into categories. For example, when you search for "home and living," the search is broken down into lighting, furniture, utensils and wall decor, to name some of the categories.

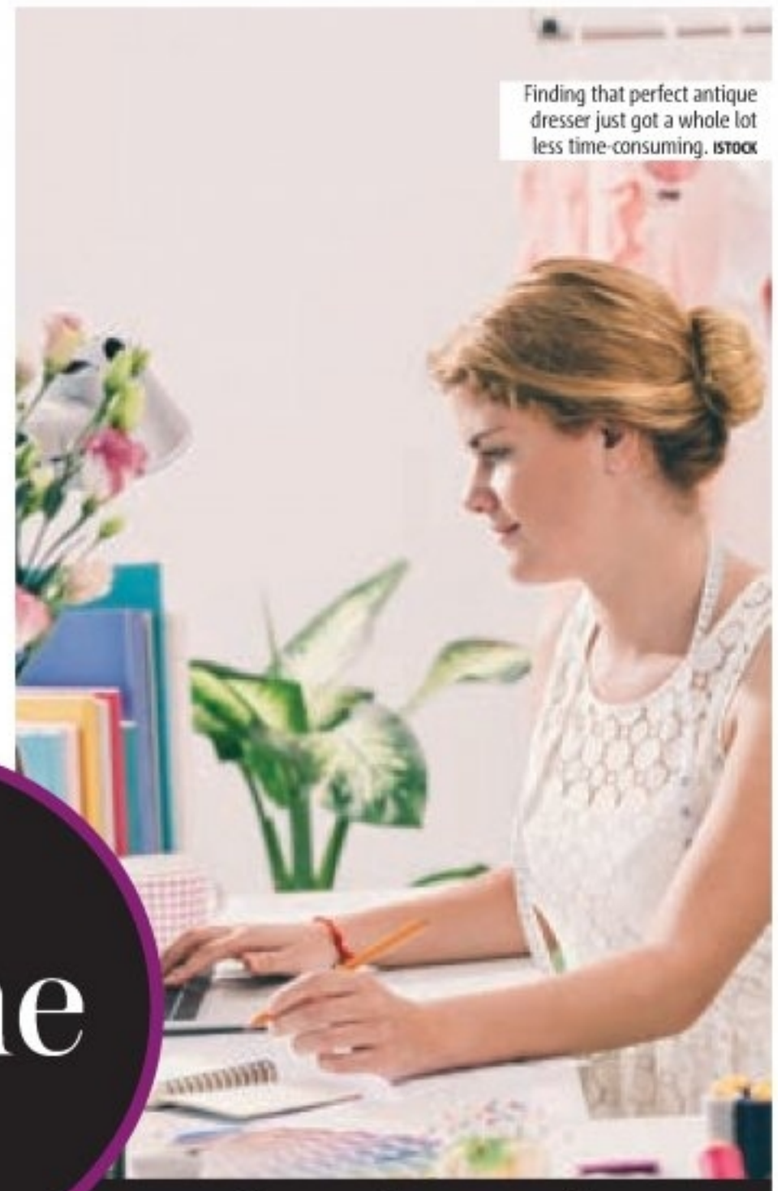
There are new categories that didn't exist before. "We used to have a whole lot of items on the site that we didn't have categories for at all," DeLanghe says. It's hard to believe but until this week, Etsy didn't have a "phone case" category. "With our new system, we can update it much, much more frequently," she says.

It's easier to shop by trend

The new filtered search works for trends, too. DeLanghe uses the example of searching for "boho." Before, anything a seller tagged as "boho" would show up in a series of seemingly endless pages. Now, the boho search is filtered into different categories such as clothing, bath and beauty, purses, accessories and jewelry. "It breaks it into more reasonable chunks for people to see an overview of the marketplace," DeLanghe says.

For example, earclimbers — a type of earring — has become really popular, and Etsy was able to add the tag as soon as they saw the trend taking off.

It's easier to use on mobile. DeLanghe says more than half of their traffic comes from mobile users, so updating their mobile version was a big priority. The app will relaunch in the coming weeks, carrying out the same search updates that are on the site, plus a more visual way of sorting.



Finding that perfect antique dresser just got a whole lot less time-consuming. ISTOCK

The roof deck is open for business

Throw the chicest summertime parties in even the smallest space.

ASIA EWART
letters@metro.us

Although summer may be winding down, we still have a few weeks of rooftop parties and fire escape barbecues left on our calendar.

And since city dwellers don't have sprawling backyards, interior designer Lauren Rottet, the founding principal and president of Rottet Studio, tells us five key ways to jazz up a tiny outdoor space.

This year, Rottet and her team designed the rooftop terrace at the 43rd Annual Kips Bay Decorator Show House in New York. PROVIDED

Pick your style

"You can go two ways with a small space," says Rottet. The first is a minimalist approach. For this, the designer recommends including just the essentials: "a couple of really beautiful big plants, one lovely little lounge chair and a tiny end table."

If your style is bolder, Rottet says sometimes the more wall interest you create, the bigger the space can feel.

"You want to really control where your eye goes," she says. "That's the whole secret to design, period."

Keep their eyes focused on one pretty spot by "hanging plants on a wall, painting designs or adding decals," she says. "The point is, whatever you see as you come out the door to your outdoor space, that wall needs to catch the eyes immediately."

Don't be afraid to decorate with white

"White is the perfect way to feel summer clean," says the expert. She loves oversized white cotton or linen throw pillows for an instant "refreshing and cool feeling." And since white gets dirty quickly, Rottet says skip the expensive brands and opt for chic styles from stores such as Ikea. Another favorite of hers: Turkish towels. "They're these pretty hand towels that are so bohemian chic and they're very popular right now." Rottet likes to drape them over chairs.

Finishing touch

"If you could buy one flower for your outdoor space, pick white hydrangeas," says Rottet. "They have this big, beautiful bulb, and are just a beautiful flower."

Another landscaping tip: "Invest in a really cool planter," the expert advises. She recommends scouring flea markets for antique styles or hitting your local flower district for affordable options. As for plants, Rottet likes ivy "that are really full and really drapey" or a little manicured boxwood shrub for a "beautiful English Hamptons look."

Sip in style

You don't need a big table to be party ready. Serve your drinks or snacks in style by wheeling them out on a bar cart. "All you have to do is bring out your pitcher of tea or martinis and you have a cute serving spot," says Rottet.

Outdoor trend

"There's a big trend towards teepees. You tell your friends to bring their pillows, and you all sort of have a teepee party. It's that 'gather around, bohemian, quasi-back to nature thing,'" says Rottet.

Troy is ready to make its mark

The South End's latest apartment block may have been a long time coming, but apartments are now being snatched up.

LINDA CLARKE
letters@metro.us

Troy Boston may still be getting its finishing touches, but the apartments in this mixed-use residential/retail development in South End are already half occupied by eager residents. And though things have moved quickly since spring when leasing began, the project has been a long time coming.

"It takes a long time for a huge development like this to come together," says Kelly Saito of real estate investor and developer Gerding Edlen. "We started talking with the property owners, the BRA, and all the other bodies four or five years ago. We were interested in this property a long time before Ink Block was known," he adds, referring to the trendy nearby complex where a Whole Foods just moved in.

Location, location, location

Portland, Oregon-based Gerding Edlen knew it had a great location. After all, the South End is brimming with cultural and dining activity, including multiple theaters and some of Boston's best boutique shopping, restaurants, cafes and galleries.

But this particular part of the brownstone-lined neighborhood has added appeal, says Saito: "We liked the South End address, but also this particular location has easy access to other neighborhoods. The Expressway and the Pike are a hop away; MBTA's Red Line subway and Silver Line bus serve the area. Chinatown, the Theater District and Southie are easily accessible. It's really a central city location."

Just in time for summer

Troy is a unique property for the city. The interior is unlike typical residential buildings, and the aesthetic is much more like a hotel. The finishing touches to Troy Boston include a pool deck with cabanas and fire pits.

Other amenities include a fitness center and yoga room, lounges, a chef's kitchen, an outdoor dog run and a dog-washing facility.

"The other thing we did, strategically, was instead of having a central amenity area, we spread them throughout the building, creating mini neighborhoods. It gives people a reason to go to other parts of the building," explains Saito.

Several common areas are spread throughout Troy Boston. SPERLING INTERACTIVE I COCO BOARDMAN

Going green

Located at 55 Traveler St., Troy Boston has 378 apartments, 38 of which are designated affordable. The market-rate units range from studios ($2,825-$3,023) to two-bedroom, two-bathrooms ($3,880-$4,666). Troy Boston is Gerding Edlen's third development in the city and follows Factory 63 and 315 on A, both located in Fort Point. Like those, the new development incorporated sustainable elements, and Troy Boston is expecting certification as a LEED Gold property. Next up: a development in East Boston. But "that's years away," say Saito. "We're only just starting with that one."

Revs finally breaking out of summer slump

MLS. New England is unbeaten in its last three matches.

Jermaine Jones will be held back no longer as the Revolution star returned to action last weekend. / GETTY IMAGES

After a rough start to the summer, the Revolution (8-9-7) have finally turned things around in recent weeks. They are unbeaten in their last three matches (2-0-1) following a 3-1 win over Toronto FC (8-8-4) on Saturday at Gillette Stadium. The result was highly important as the teams went into the match tied for fourth-place in the Eastern Conference and the victory should give New England a good feeling as it heads into its long-awaited first bye week of the season. August is a particularly quiet month for the Revs as they only have two more games left: Aug. 15 vs. Houston (7-8-7) at Gillette (7:30 p.m., CSNNE) and Aug. 29 at Philadelphia (7, CSNNE), which right now is the worst team in MLS (6-13-4).

Former Boston College star striker Charlie Davies carried New England in its victory over Toronto as he scored a pair of goals. That gives him a team-best nine goals on the season and he also had a career-high four shots on goal, showing how dangerous he can be. Midfielder Lee Nguyen added the other strike on a penalty kick, marking three straight games that he's found the back of the net.

"Charlie was itching for one, he really wanted that one last week against Chicago and we all thought that he got it against Chicago so he tasted it and I think [Saturday] from the opening minute he was going to be aggressive and it showed," said New England head coach Jay Heaps. "He pressured well, he was in good spots defensively and whenever he does that, I can tell he's going to get his chances."

The Revolution also saw midfielder Jermaine Jones return as a substitute in his first appearance since his groin injury, suffered back on May 31. Having him back in the lineup changes everything as New England also had midfielder Teal Bunbury and striker Juan Agudelo come off the bench. That shows the type of quality depth the Revs possess when healthy and it is one of the main reasons why they should still be viewed as one of the top contenders to win the Eastern Conference this fall.

Brady appeal transcript released

Another day, another 457 pages of material related to deflated footballs to digest.

The transcript of Tom Brady's June 23 appeal hearing with the NFL was released Tuesday and in a cross examination with Lorin Reisner, Brady talks about his preference in footballs. Via ProFootballTalk:

"Ball pressure has been so inconsequential, I hadn't even thought about that," Brady said. "I think at the end of the day, the only time I thought about it was after the Jet game and then after this was brought up, after the [AFC] championship game. It's never something that has been on my radar, registered. I never said 'psi.' I don't think I even know what that meant until after the [AFC] championship game. It was something that never crossed my mind.

"The only time I have ever thought about the air pressure in a football was after the Jets game when they were at the level of 16.

"So whenever I went to pick the game balls, I never once in 15 years ever asked what the ball pressure was set at until after the Jet game. So whether it's 12.5 or 12.6 or 12.7 or 12.8 or 12.9 or 13, all the way up to the Colts game, I still think it's inconsequential to what the actual feel of a grip of a football would be.

Tom Brady / GETTY IMAGES

"I think the irony of everything is I don't even squeeze a football," he said. "I think that's something that's really important to know is I grip the ball as loosely as possible. I don't even squeeze the ball and I think that's why it's impossible for me to probably tell the difference between what 12.5 and 12.7 and 12.9 and 13 because I'm just gripping it like a golf club. I've tried to explain it. It's like a golf club. You don't squeeze the golf club. You handle it very gently. And that's the same way I handle a football." MATT BURKE
